

Cellphone bans on aircraft should only be limited to cases where the phones may interfere with equipment on the planes, and not because some passengers may not like to hear others talking on their phones. The FCC is correct to limit use where dangerous interference is an issue, but not where personal freedom is.